ExxonMobil, Employees and Retirees Donate More Than $50 Million to U.S. Colleges and Universities

- More than 800 U.S. colleges and universities to benefit from ExxonMobil matching program
- Nearly $700 million donated since program began in 1962
- Program is primarily focused on enhancing engineering, math and science education

IRVING, Texas--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- ExxonMobil said today that 806 accredited colleges and universities in the United States will receive a total of $50.4 million as part of the ExxonMobil Foundation's 2018 Educational Matching Gift Program. Nearly 4,000 ExxonMobil employees and retirees contributed more than $17 million to institutions of higher education in 2018, which will be matched with over $32 million in unrestricted grants from the foundation.

ExxonMobil's program matches individual donations to accredited colleges and universities in the United States. The American Indian College Fund, Hispanic Scholarship Fund and United Negro College Fund are also eligible to receive donations as part of the matching gift program.

ExxonMobil has donated nearly $700 million to U.S. institutions of higher learning since the program began.

"Supporting higher education, particularly in the areas of engineering, math and science, is critical in improving individual livelihoods as well as driving broader societal growth," said Kevin Murphy, president of the ExxonMobil Foundation. "We've long supported programs that improve educational outcomes and provide teachers with the tools they need to inspire our next generation of leaders and innovators."

Although ExxonMobil's educational matching grants are unrestricted, colleges and universities are encouraged to designate a portion of the funds they receive to engineering, math and science programs.
