"This test is a critical step in validating that LizzieSat is ready for flight. In addition, we have completed other critical actions including obtaining the necessary launch and operating license," said Lindsey Waitt, LizzieSat Program Manager. "I am incredibly proud of the Sidus Engineering team who has worked tirelessly to achieve this important milestone and we look forward to the launch of LizzieSat."

Testing was completed by NTS Orlando where the LizzieSat Spacecraft underwent random vibration testing resulting in flight-qualification levels. The test was performed on the fully integrated LizzieSat Satellite that is manifested to launch into space early next year.
