A look at the Status-quo Following the Mid-term Elections

By Paul Silver

With the mid-term elections just behind us, the referendum to Washington seems clear. Big government (deficit) spending with huge entitlements does not equate to the political punch-line “Change We Can Believe In.” Fiscal responsibility for the individual and the government needs to be addressed. Let’s take a look at how we are doing, both as individuals and as a nation, in this challenging economic environment.

Last month, the Federal Reserve released the new Z.1 Flow of Funds document. The document indicates that while individuals, households and businesses have recently been reducing their outstanding debt, all levels of government continue to engage in the same reckless behavior of spending money they don’t have. Increases in local, state, and federal government debt outstanding over the past year and a half through the second quarter 2010 took total domestic nonfinancial sector debt to a new all-time high, $35.45 trillion. Add in domestic financial sector debt, and we’re up to $50.2 trillion.

Consider some of the salient statistics calculated from the Z.1 document. From the start of 2009 through the second quarter of 2010:

- Total household debt outstanding shrank 2.8%;
- Household mortgage debt outstanding declined 3.5%;
- Consumer credit decreased by 5.5%;
- Total nonfinancial business debt outstanding fell 2.2%;
- State & local government debt outstanding increased 6.1%; and
- Federal government debt outstanding grew a whopping 36.9%.

In summary, while consumers and businesses are acting at least somewhat more responsibly, governments at all levels continue to spend money with unchecked abandon. The newly “out of work” politicians may take notice of these statistics as a primary reason for their newly minted status as unemployed. Join the line.

Decline of Manufacturing

In addition to our uncomfortable government debt burden created by an utter lack of fiscal responsibility, we are simultaneously plagued with a rapid erosion of the manufacturing base in the United States. Most people are aware that manufacturing in the U.S. has been on the decline for years as we have transitioned to a service-based economy. However, there are some statistics on the rate of decline that may surprise many:

- In January of 2001, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, 17.1 million Americans were employed in manufacturing. Today, a mere 11.7 million Americans work in manufacturing, which reflects a decline of 5.4 million jobs and 32% in just ten years. The last time fewer than 12 million Americans were employed in manufacturing was in 1941.
- The U.S. has lost approximately 42,400 factories since 2001.
- In 1959, manufacturing represented 28% of U.S. economic output. In 2008, it represented 11.5%.

American entrepreneurs created mass production and advanced manufacturing techniques. However, thanks to a number of factors, including a heavy-handed regulatory establishment that makes domestic manufacturing cost prohibitive in many cases, U.S. bellwether names like Dell and Apple are relocating their manufacturing facilities to foreign markets. Last year, Dell announced that it would be closing its last large manufacturing facility in the U.S. while greatly expanding operations in China. According to Apple, “significant portions of the Company’s Mac computers, iPhones, iPods, logic boards and other assembled products are manufactured by outsourcing partners, primarily in various parts of Asia.”

This problem is not new but the rate of decline is worrisome in the face of increasing trade deficits and near record high national unemployment levels. If the U.S. manufacturing base continues to erode at such a pace, the weight of the debt accumulated to fuel consumption at the expense of production will be crushing.

WSR's Aggressive Growth and Speculator Focus Lists

Companies included in the WSR-Aggressive Growth list are primarily companies based outside of our home state of Florida and are generally trading at a significant discount to their peers, breaking out of long-term bases or have recently announced a significant event. To qualify for inclusion, companies in the WSR-Aggressive Growth portfolio must have a market capitalization less than $500 million and must have met a certain number of valuation and performance based hurdles including but not limited to revenue growth, PEG ratio, tangible book value, and profitability.

Companies included in WSR-Speculator portfolio are typically early stage or turnaround companies which are frequently WSR clients and (in our opinion) have the potential for a three hundred percent return over the next three to five years. Changes to these lists are emailed to WSR's subscribers via its Daily Notes publication and are updated each month in The Emerging Growth News.

OCTOBER'S TOP COMPANIES UNDER $5.00 AS MEASURED BY INSIDER BUYING:

Investors and analysts look to the buying and selling trends of insiders, who are typically long-term investors, for clues to the broader market outlook. According to Ben Silverman, InsiderScore.com's director of research, "Insiders have been very accurate in terms of calling market bottoms, both temporary, in terms of corrections, and troughs."

Although insider buying is a useful tool to consider when making a decision on which stock to buy, it should be looked at carefully lest it give a false positive signal. Investors need to look behind the headlines and conduct their own research before buying on this basis. For example, option exercises can also give false signals. This section summarizes the companies (trading under $5.00 per share) with the greatest amount of purchasing by insiders during the previous month.

The chart on the left illustrates the 4 and 13 week trailing average "Net Buying" in relationship to the entire market. In other words, what percent of the stocks in the entire market have net insider buying. In theory, the higher the percent the greater the indication that the overall market will increase in price.
