“Like lululemon, Xponential is passionate about bridging the gap between digital and in-person workouts to meet today's hybrid fitness consumer where they are,” said Garrett Marshall, President of Fitness Streaming for Xponential Fitness. “We look forward to introducing lululemon Studio users to Xponential's incredible workouts and top-notch instructors across a variety of fitness modalities.”

The Xponential workouts appearing on lululemon Studio feature top instructors from Xponential's own digital platform, Xponential+ (XPLUS), including Noah Neiman of Rumble, Shantani Moore of Pure Barre, Stacey Zielinski of AKT, and Tamara Teragawa of YogaSix.

lululemon Studio launched October 5 and is accessible through the lululemon Studio MIRROR, app and in-person experiences. Consumers without a lululemon Studio MIRROR can experience Pure Barre, Rumble, AKT and YogaSix digital workouts with a free trial on Xponential's streaming app, XPLUS.

The partnership with lululemon marks another step forward in Xponential Fitness' mission to make boutique fitness accessible for everyone. In recent years, the company has vastly expanded its digital footprint to elevate and complement the energetic, communal studio workouts that happen across its 2,000-plus locations around the world. Boasting over 500,000 members in the U.S., Xponential's brands also include Club Pilates, CycleBar, StretchLab, Row House, STRIDE Fitness and BFT.
