The Credit Crisis: Insights into the Commercial Impact

The credit crisis goes commercial? That's what many are saying, and according to recent research conducted by Equifax Commercial Information Solutions, the impact of the economic downturn can certainly be seen on commercially active businesses in the United States. For its research, Equifax analyzed key credit trends within the portfolios of 26 top national and regional financial institutions. Overall, findings showed that the story is not improving for the commercial market.

"Our analysis shows that the credit crisis has permeated the commercial market, bringing strong headwinds to nearly every sector of this landscape," said Dr. Reza Barazesh, senior vice president, Commercial Information Solutions, Equifax. "With business failures on the rise and more industries sliding toward bankruptcy, commercial businesses must draw upon the industry's best data and analytics to mitigate risk and better manage their portfolios."

The following metrics provide a snapshot of the market's impact on quarterly commercial credit trends based on key data attributes.

Strong Acceleration in Bankruptcy Filings

According to Equifax data, commercial bankruptcies increased by 208 percentage points from Q1 2008 to Q2 2009 while consumer bankruptcies rose by 122 percentage points for the same time period. A closer look at the commercial landscape also shows that there are significant differences in bankruptcy rates among regions.
