For $29.99 per month, subscribers gain access to the leading fitness workouts across Pilates, barre, indoor cycling, stretching, yoga, rowing, dance, running and boxing, at home or on the go (BFT, Xponential’s newest brand, will be added to the library of online workouts later in 2022). The XPLUS app is currently available to new subscribers across 175 countries.

The app enables users to view nearby Xponential Fitness studios and request a free class or booking information, augmenting the personalized hybrid in-studio and online experience. Memberships to physical Xponential Fitness studios are sold separately.

XPLUS represents the next evolution of Xponential’s mission to become the most accessible boutique fitness provider. Replacing the preceding digital offering known as GO, which was offered singularly at the brand level, XPLUS combines the entire digital libraries of each brand in one convenient location.

“Unlike many consumer-facing fitness apps that generalize across various fitness formats, XPLUS brings together each of the category-leading experts across a breadth of modalities, in one single app,” said Garrett Marshall, President of Fitness Streaming for Xponential Fitness. “Consolidating all of our brands’ digital offerings into one app will provide our customers with unprecedented optionality and a way to cross-train with the leaders in their favorite fitness formats.”

With over 3,000 workouts available to users and more than 60 new and trending classes streaming weekly, XPLUS empowers users to achieve all of their fitness goals wherever they are and regardless of their fitness level. XPLUS classes are programmed for beginners to experts and vary from 10 to 90 minutes in length. Some classes require equipment, ranging from blocks or light weights for YogaSix workouts to a stationary bike for CycleBar workouts.
