

Company Overview

By applying proprietary modern processing technologies and strategic partnerships Standard Lithium (TSXV.SLL) is poised to bring the first new U.S. based lithium project in over 50+ years into production. The company's flagship south Arkansas project is the largest and most advanced lithium brine project in the U.S.A. The 3.94 million tonne lithium carbonate equivalent resource, 175,000-acre project is located in a region of southern Arkansas that is home to North America's largest brine production and processing facilities.

Standard Lithium is partnered with global specialty chemical company LANXESS on the project. The partnership is in the demonstration stage of testing the commercial viability of lithium extraction on a mass scale from brine that is a byproduct of existing bromine production facilities run by Lanxess in the southern state.
