December Diversity Jobs Report Reveals Opportunities For Employers Seeking To Hire Women And Minorities

Data suggests existing pipeline of diverse candidates can help meet demand in growing health care sector

CHICAGO, Dec. 9, 2014 /PRNewswire/ -- Professional Diversity Network, Inc. (Nasdaq:IPDN) releases its newest Diversity Jobs Report (DJR) and Diversity Jobs Index (DJI), which includes an analysis of the nation's employment situation for women, minorities, veterans, LGBT and disabled persons for the month prior. The December report focuses on workforce diversity and best practices in the health care industry.

DJR highlights:

- Impact of baby boomers: In spite of the recession, the health care industry has been a key economic driver and consistently added new jobs over the past decade. Job growth in this sector is expected to continue to accommodate the aging US population, namely baby boomers.
- Sizeable minority pipeline: If health care employers are inclined to increase diversity hiring, data indicates there is a sufficient pipeline of qualified Hispanic and African American job seekers to help meet demand in certain occupations.
- Women key to workforce: Due mostly to nursing and administrative jobs, employment in the health care labor force ranks highest among women at 74.8 percent (including education and health services).

"Diversity in the health care industry is of vital importance to better understand the cultural differences in various populations within our country, quickly diagnose conditions and provide patients with better overall medical care," said Star Jones, president, Professional Diversity Network. "Our goal is to help health care employers identify and hire top diverse talent to meet these needs."

Although overall unemployment is declining, joblessness for minorities is increasing nationwide. The DJI for November 2014 is 44.97, indicating a 23.87% decrease in demand for diverse talent as compared to the month prior.
