We also continued to make significant progress on our previously announced $24 million contract with a Tier 1 technology company," said Perry Mulligan, MicroVision's Chief Executive Officer.

"We also have achieved significant milestones in elements of our core technology, including a new time-of-flight ASIC and a next generation, high resolution MEMS scanner, both necessary to enable our goal of being ready for mass production with several of our new products in early 2019. We are currently working to complete the next generation of development kits that will support our Interactive Display and Sensing products," Mulligan added.
