"We applaud our 2016 Experience Vendor Award winners," noted Bay. "Their continued leadership and commitment to our channel partners' success motivates us to serve as an indispensable partner and find new and better ways to work smarter together, shorten the sales cycle and deliver an exceptional experience."

The 2016 Experience Vendor Awards were presented October 7 at Ingram Micro's new Irvine, Calif., headquarters. The annual event, hosted by Agency Ingram Micro, highlighted how Ingram Micro is empowering its vendors and channel partners to identify and engage the right customers with the right message at the right time to drive more sales. In addition to market insights, the event focused on how together Ingram Micro and its vendors are growing share of wallet with existing channel partners, attracting new ones and setting higher standards of excellence in execution across the technology lifecycle.

"Each year we come together to celebrate, share best practices and show our vendor partners what more we can do to be successful together in the coming year," concludes Jennifer Anaya, vice president, Marketing, Ingram Micro. "With hundreds in attendance, Experience 2016 was a success. Thank you to everyone who joined us and congratulations to all our award winners."

Over the last year, Agency Ingram Micro has earned several industry awards. Led by Anaya and co-managed by Creative Director Dennis Crupi, who was recently named one of CRN's 2015 Top 100 People You Don't Know But Should, and Senior Director Jennifer Johnson, the team produces hundreds of projects each month for IT vendors and channel partners, spanning everything from custom print ads and mailers, to social websites, videos, and brand refreshes.
