Established by the GSA, the Contact Center SIN provides agencies with a diverse set of pre-vetted citizen engagement center solutions through a single contract. The Contact Center SIN is focused on a wide range of technologies that support citizen engagement, including artificial intelligence (AI), chat bots, robotic process automation (RPA) and voice/speech recognition. It was developed to align with the President's Management Agenda, which calls for federal agencies to adopt customer service approaches that have been successful in the commercial sector.

"As the first Contact Center SIN awardee, we are both honored and excited to bring our proven expertise and next-generation technology to help agencies with their citizen engagement and contact center services," said Bruce L. Caswell, President and Chief Executive Officer of MAXIMUS. "Over the last two years, MAXIMUS Federal has participated in market research, industry days and requests for information to support the GSA's plans to establish this innovative contract vehicle."

As a leader in business process management and the delivery of citizen engagement solutions at scale, the new Contact Center SIN will present opportunities to meet the evolving demands of critical government programs while advancing the MAXIMUS digital modernization strategy.
