

Inogen Introduces Voxi 5 Stationary Oxygen Concentrator: Setting a New Standard in Affordable, Durable Oxygen Therapy

GOLETA, Calif.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- Inogen, Inc. (Nasdaq: INGN), a leading medical technology company specializing in innovative respiratory products for homecare use, today announced the launch of Voxi™ 5, a new stationary oxygen concentrator (SOC) designed to enhance access to high-quality oxygen therapy for long-term care patients in the United States. As the latest addition to Inogen's product portfolio, Voxi 5 augments the company's line of portable oxygen concentrators, significantly expanding the market potential while leveraging existing sales channels.

The Voxi 5 stationary oxygen concentrator combines affordability with durability, setting a new standard in oxygen therapy

Developed in collaboration with Yuwell Medical, Voxi 5 presents a viable option for patients seeking reliable stationary oxygen therapy, delivering 1-5 L/min of quiet¹, pure², continuous flow oxygen in a compact³ and efficient design. The device also features caster wheels to allow for worry free movement between rooms in the home, providing enhanced mobility and ease-of-use.

"With Voxi 5, we are fulfilling our mission to make respiratory care more accessible and empowering for patients," said Kevin Smith, President and Chief Executive Officer. "This launch exemplifies our commitment to innovation, affordability, and enhancing the quality of life for those dependent on oxygen therapy."

Voxi 5 complements the Inogen At Home® product by offering a value-driven solution for price-sensitive customers or those in need of an additional unit for multi-room use. The Voxi 5 further solidifies Inogen's position as a pioneer in the home oxygen therapy market, offering patients and healthcare providers a reliable and efficient solution for managing chronic respiratory conditions.
