Equifax was the only information solutions company spotlighted on the Magnificent Seven list. The other honorees included E&J Gallo Winery, Bank of New York Mellon, Principal Financial Group, FedEx, General Motors, and Wyeth.

"Equifax is honored to be included among this listing of companies," said Rick Smith, Chairman and CEO, Equifax. "This honor is a tribute to Equifax's continued commitment and investment in new product development and technologies that deliver new solutions to our customers' challenges around the world."

Now in its 19th year, the InformationWeek 500 tracks the technology strategies and investments of America's best-known companies. Available at www.informationweek.com, the list recognizes companies that have demonstrated excellence and innovation in their business-technology practices. This annual survey, which examines companies spanning 21 industries, analyzes core areas of operation, including IT budgets, technology deployment, infrastructure, and business technology strategies.

Throughout its history, Equifax has earned a strong reputation for its continued investments in new technologies. Nearly 1,000 organizations, including many of the world's largest financial institutions and leading utilities use Equifax technology. In fact, 30 of the top 50 banks rely on Equifax's risk decisioning solutions, which are powered by Equifax Enabling Technologies platforms.
