The judges cited TrueBlue's policies for shareholder rights, equity compensation and oversight in choosing to honor the company. TrueBlue's board also stands out for having three of its eight seats held by women and three by persons of color. The Board also received a top ISS Quality Score in governance from Institutional Shareholder Services.

"Having a board that is inclusive and represents different perspectives has a positive impact on our governance style, including administrative practices, HR management and long-term planning, as well as our ability to successfully innovate," TrueBlue CEO Steve Cooper said.

TrueBlue Director Jeff Sakaguchi added, "Our directors bring a broad matrix of skills, often representing the industries of TrueBlue clients, and a desire to connect people to work in ways that will improve their lives. We're honored to be recognized for our deliberate effort to reflect the communities we serve."

TrueBlue was also recently recognized as a Corporate Champion by the Women's Forum of New York for the gender diversity on its Board.
