Construction Season Hiring Boom Brings Opportunity for Job Seekers

PeopleReady says this year's construction season brings as many as 500,000 jobs across the U.S. - many require no experience and provide on-the-job training

TACOMA, Wash.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- After a year of pandemic shutdowns and company downsizing amid an uncertain U.S. economy, the construction industry is back and booming. According to staffing leader PeopleReady, this year's construction season brings with it roughly 500,000 jobs across the U.S.—many of which include on-the-job training—creating immediate opportunities for those looking for work.

“A solid construction season and the jobs it provides can help people who’ve been hit hard financially over the past year get back on their feet,” said Taryn Owen, president of PeopleReady. “Temporary jobs in the construction industry can provide the opportunity to learn new skills, along with flexibility, independence and, of course, a steady paycheck.”

Based on a PeopleReady analysis of hundreds of thousands of jobs, some of the most in-demand construction jobs hiring right now, which require little to no prior experience, include:

- Roofing helpers
- General constructions workers
- Concrete workers
- Ground maintenance workers
- Flaggers

To connect job seekers with available construction-related jobs throughout the U.S., PeopleReady is holding monthly hiring events and encouraging people to apply to jobs via app (JobStack), online (jobs.peopleready.com), and in person (at PeopleReady locations across the nation).
