MAXIMUS Awarded $16.1 Million California Integrated Information System Contract

RESTON, Va.--(BUSINESS WIRE)--

MAXIMUS (NYSE:MMS), a leading provider of technology, consulting, and operations services to government, announced today that the California Department of Conservation has awarded the Company a contract to design, build, and implement the Division of Recycling Integrated Information System (DORIIS). The four-year contract is valued at $16.1 million.

DORIIS, the flexible, scalable system based upon Oracle's E-Business Suite, will handle the Recycling Division's collection, payment processing, customer relationship management, and management information system needs. The system will provide comprehensive and accurate beverage container recycling information that will allow the Division to improve recycling rates, reduce reimbursement fraud, and increase cash flow. Additionally, the system is expected to help reduce State and local government costs as the result of reduced local landfill use and increased revenue to local government for the California Redemption Value, the fees placed on containers that are recycled.

"This is not simply a system implementation project, but a true business process reengineering and change management effort. MAXIMUS is excited at the opportunity to bring to bear our unique consulting and technology expertise to the California's Department of Conservation," said Richard Montoni, CEO of MAXIMUS.

MAXIMUS has more than 15 years of extensive experience in the implementation of Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) solutions at the State and local level. This experience is complemented by nearly three decades of quality assurance and business process consulting.
