"It was a great quarter for Network-1," commented Corey M. Horowitz, Chairman and CEO of Network-1. "We successfully completed our royalty audit of Cisco which resulted in our receiving significant additional royalties under our license agreement and, importantly, the validity of the Remote Power Patent was confirmed by the United States Patent Office in the Inter Partes Review proceeding initiated by Avaya and joined by HP, Dell and Sony," he added. "During the quarter, we also received an additional patent relating to the Cox patent portfolio and we began our monetization efforts of that portfolio thereby continuing to expand upon our goal of diversifying our IP monetization efforts across our several valuable portfolios."

On April 4, 2014, Network-1 initiated litigation against Google and YouTube in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York for infringement of several of its patents within Network-1's Cox patent portfolio which relates to the identification of media content on the Internet. The lawsuit alleges that Google and YouTube have infringed and continue to infringe certain of Network-1's patents by making, using, selling and offering to sell unlicensed systems and related products and services, which include YouTube's Content ID system.
