being recognized once again for their influence and insight to drive success.

Many of the leaders named to this year's Women of the Channel will be in attendance and speaking next week at the Ingram Micro Global Cloud and Innovation Summit and Ingram Micro Women in Tech: Be Inspired event taking place May 15. #IngramMicroGCIS23

"We are incredibly proud of our executives featured on this year's CRN Women of the Channel and Power 100 lists," said Scott Sherman, executive vice president, human resources, Ingram Micro. "Ingram Micro is transforming the IT channel with the adoption of our digital twin Ingram Micro Xvantage and stands committed to promoting and actioning diversity, equity and inclusion. As a result of these combined efforts, we are showing up stronger together in every region and have seen DEI within our workforce globally increase year-over-year."

Last year, Ingram Micro appointed multi-year CRN Power 100 honoree Susan O'Sullivan to the role of vice president, DEI. In this role, O'Sullivan spearheads the team's DEI awareness and programs, supports employee resource groups and inspires channel partners and vendors doing business with Ingram Micro to think forward and make positive changes within their own organizations.

"What I love about my role is having the ability to listen more, learn from and motivate others, not only in our company, but in our industry and within the communities we live in," says O'Sullivan. "Ingram Micro has always been led by incredible individuals and it is my pleasure to work with my fellow Ingram Micro Women of the Channel honorees and serve together as an indispensable partner to the channel."
