ResMed Secures Significant Victory in Patent Fight Against New York University

SAN DIEGO, Dec. 11, 2023 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- ResMed (NYSE: RMD, ASX: RMD) announced that it has secured a significant victory after the United States Patent Trial and Appeals Board (PTAB) invalidated the claims New York University (NYU) asserted against ResMed, based on seven NYU patents.

In June 2021, NYU filed a complaint for patent infringement against ResMed in the United States District Court, District of Delaware. NYU's complaint alleged that the AutoSet™ and AutoRamp™ features of ResMed's AirSense™ 10 AutoSet flow generators, infringed one or more claims of seven NYU patents.

ResMed filed petitions with the PTAB asserting that all the claims asserted against ResMed were invalid. In rulings issued from December 4 to December 7, 2023, the PTAB judges, agreeing with ResMed's arguments, found that all the challenged claims across the seven patents were invalid.

"At ResMed, we're committed to providing patients with our leading therapy solutions. Our sustained investment in research and development for over 30 years has culminated in more than 9,500 issued or pending patents and designs," said Mick Farrell, ResMed's CEO. "We applaud the PTAB's ruling and will defend our innovations, ensuring patients continue to receive our therapy solutions, empowering them to live healthier, higher-quality lives."

"We will continue to vigorously defend our innovations," said Michael Rider, ResMed's Global General Counsel and Secretary. "The fact that our intellectual property contributed to this victory is a testament to our investment in research and development, the hard work of our inventors, and the patent protection we pursue to protect our innovation."
