According to Jason Reid, Coda Octopus President and Chief Executive Officer, "During the third fiscal quarter, the Company made important progress in building the management infrastructure, organizational skills, and financial systems, that will be required to support the level of expansion we are planning for the beginning of next year, as real time 3D sonar products become widely adopted by port authorities and governmental agencies both in the US and around the world."

"For now," he said, "We are working closely with the US Coast Guard and related agencies to advance next generation real time 3D underwater inspection (UIS) systems, while marketing today's systems on a worldwide basis."

Coda recently announced it had commenced work on a $2.59 million contract with the Department of Defense (DoD) Technical Support Working Group (TSWG) to deliver three initial (UIS) systems to the Coast Guard. The contract could expand to a total of $8.27 million if TSWG exercises the option to procure more systems. Reid said that Company had recently completed the initial design review meeting in St Petersburg, Florida, that it had attracted broad participation from government, military and university representatives, and that, "The response was one of genuine enthusiasm."

He said, "We are impressed by the level of commitment the Coast Guard has made thus far to real time 3D sonar. Given the continued high levels of funding for port security technology both in the US and around the world, we think opinion leadership of the kind we are building at the highest levels through TSWG will serve as a catalyst with the potential to transform the Company's marketing and sales efforts."
