Sigma Labs Announces PrintRite3D(R) System Sale

Includes Upcoming DEFORM(TM) Software

SANTA FE, N.M., May 4, 2015 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Sigma Labs, Inc. (OTCQB:SGLB) ("Sigma Labs" or the "Company"), a leading developer of proprietary In-Process Quality Assurance™ (IPQA®) software for additive manufacturing ("AM"), today announced that Honeywell has entered into a contract with the Company to acquire Sigma Labs' PrintRite3D® system. As part of the award, Sigma Labs will deliver and install its PrintRite3D® INSPECT™ software – including one license and a year of maintenance – for Honeywell to test within its AM development facility in Phoenix; the purchase order also includes Sigma Labs' first contract for its groundbreaking DEFORM™ software, which will be provided when ready for release. Payment terms were not disclosed. This contract is separate from the expected deliverable related to the America Makes research project.

"We are very excited to announce this award, which marks our first commercial sale to Honeywell of our proprietary PrintRite3D® INSPECT™ and upcoming DEFORM™ quality assurance software," said Mark Cola, President and Chief Executive Officer of Sigma Labs. "As stated on our fourth quarter earnings call, we have been actively marketing our software solutions as well as our new metal 3D printing capabilities and are pleased at the current level of business development discussions underway. We continue to believe that 2015 will be a year that showcases Sigma Labs' technology and greatly expands our top line growth."
