AxoGen, Inc. Expands Presence at the American Society for Surgery of the Hand (ASSH) 2015

Sponsoring Interactive Panel Discussion with Leading Surgeons on the Value of Nerve Repair Technologies in Today's Practices

ALACHUA, FL – August 24, 2015– AxoGen, Inc. (NASDAQ: AXGN), a leader in developing and marketing innovative surgical solutions for peripheral nerve injuries, today announced the expansion of their presence at this year's American Society for Surgery of the Hand (ASSH) 2015 Meeting, taking place September 10-12 in Seattle, Washington.

AxoGen, Inc. is sponsoring an interactive panel discussion entitled The Value of Nerve Repair Technologies in Your Practice on Friday, September 11 from 7:00-8:00am. The panel is comprised of leading nerve repair practitioners, including Peter Evans, MD PhD FRCSC, Cleveland Clinic, Cleveland OH, Dean Sotereanos, MD, University of Pittsburgh Center, Pittsburgh PA, Bauback Safa, MD MBA FACS, The Buncke Clinic, San Francisco, CA, and Joaquim Casañas, MD, Teknon Medical Center, Barcelona, Spain. The panel will focus on the value of nerve repair technologies in today's nerve repair practices and will discuss current clinical data, evidence based repair algorithms, case planning, time saving approaches, repair optimization and clinical cases with participation from those in attendance.

AxoGen products will be discussed and demonstrated in scientific presentations, panel discussions and in educational programs during the conference. In addition, Karen Zaderej, AxoGen's President and CEO, is an invited speaker at the Women in Hand Surgery event.

"AxoGen is committed to providing access to the latest innovative techniques in peripheral nerve repair. Our technologies play a key role in providing surgeons with solutions for many of their standard, as well as challenging nerve injuries. These educational programs help to provide surgeons with the latest information on repair techniques that can be incorporated into the surgeon's daily practice", says Erick DeVinney, AxoGen's Vice President of Clinical and Translational Sciences.

In addition to sponsoring the educational forums, AxoGen will be exhibiting its full portfolio of nerve repair products at Booth 629 at the ASSH meeting.
