This designation is awarded to participants in the Best Practices Study, which analyzes and documents the business practices of the highest-performing insurance agencies in the industry. This year, 1,146 independent U.S. agencies were nominated to compete for this designation, while only 348 agencies scored high enough to qualify as a Best Practices Agency.

"This recognition represents our colleagues' deep expertise and commitment to providing innovative insurance solutions and exceptional customer support," said Angie Klett, president of Huntington Insurance. "As we continue to grow, we intend to bring our scale and expertise to new markets and customers, allowing us to make an even greater impact on individuals, families and businesses nationwide."

Since 1993, the Independent Insurance Agents & Brokers of America (IIABA or the Big "I") and Reagan Consulting, an Atlanta-based management consulting firm, have joined forces to study the country's leading agencies in seven revenue categories. Best Practices Agencies are selected every three years through a rigorous nomination and qualifying process. Each agency must be among the 35-45 top-performing agencies in its revenue category to be awarded Best Practices status.
